WHOLESOME UPHOLSTERY

The tufted hemp bed, like many pieces in the house, was crafted by Cisco Brothers, an L.A.-based manufacturer. "What they make is responsible from beginning to end," Turner raves. This means the wood is Forest Stewardship Council-certified, the fabrics are from natural, rapidly renewable sources (flax, wool, jute)—and all of the materials are biodegradable and secured with nontoxic, water-based glue. To temper the bed's sensuous curves, Turner paired it with modern side tables and X-ray photos of plants by artist Steve Miller.

BED Hemp "Acacia" $2,915 and SIDE TABLES Teak "Khalo" $1,730 each, ciscobrothers.com for stores SHEETS Organic cotton $189/queen set, potterybarn.com BLANKET Vintage kilim $1,500 and LAMPS Reclaimed wood $1,650 each, Nathan Turner (310) 275-1209 ARTWORK Steve Miller "Health of the Planet" series photographs $1,900 each (framed), visionaryboutique.com

The bedding fuses past and present: a worn vintage blanket and crisp new organic cotton sheets.

A handspun, all-natural jute rug ties the area together and delivers another dose of texture.

RECLAIMED MATERIALS

Playing to the warm tones of the recycled terra-cotta tiles, Turner orchestrated a symphony of woods in the dining room. The stools are fallen-tree stumps from Argentina (by way of Pottery Barn), the table is a slab of reclaimed wood on a metal base and the mirror frames are from a salvage yard. "Junkyards are one of my favorite places to shop," Turner says. "People get intimidated, but sometimes you're just a handyman away from installing an old door in your house." Turner loves that repurposed wood not only lasts longer than "veneer-covered particle board" but also exudes an air of casual hominess.

TABLE Reclaimed-wood "Wilcox" $2,295 and CHAIRS Hemp "Lychee" $795 each, ciscobrothers.com for stores STOOLS Reclaimed wood $199 each, and RUG (similar to shown) 8' x 10' flat-braided jute $499 potterybarn.com MIRRORS Reclaimed-wood frames $575 each, Nathan Turner (310) 275-1209
